Story

British intelligence service has always been a master at playing the shadow game. But when the world's most powerful nations start trading information instead of oil or gold, even MI6 and MI5 may not be able to keep up with the new reality.

It all starts with a strange incident in the small town of Godring, lost somewhere in the UK countryside. A local archivist finds a file in old military records that shouldn't have been there and sends it to the national registry. A few hours later, his apartment blows up and the archive is set on fire.

Henry Grayson, an MI6 veteran who has retired after a botched operation in Moscow, accidentally learns of the incident. For him, it's just another mysterious death... until he discovers that the archivist had once worked for Soviet intelligence. What has he found? And why are such powerful people behind it?

Meanwhile, Emma Charlton, an MI5 analyst, tracks massive manipulation of the cryptocurrency market and the invisible hand that adjusts stock prices in London, Berlin and New York. She suspects that a new top-secret organisation is behind it, operating undercover. But her investigation is cut short when her own informant is murdered in Tallinn and her computer is filled with files she didn't download.

Matching these two incidents, Grayson and Charlton come to an incredible conclusion: an unknown spy network is operating in the heart of London, manipulating the economy and politics on a global scale. It manages the flow of information, erases traces and rewrites history in a way that suits it.

Their investigation leads them to the Black Chamber, a secret elite club affiliated with influential businessmen and Russian special services. They don't just steal data - they decide what is true and what is not. They can destroy the reputation of any world leader with a single click. They can erase entire countries from history.

But this club has one more secret: someone from MI6 is among its members.

Now Grayson and Charlton are forced to play against their own system, not knowing who they can trust. From Buckingham Palace to secret government bunkers, from London's financial district to the private yachts of Russian oligarchs in the Mediterranean, they try to stay ahead of those who can destroy them before they even realise the truth.

Because in a world where truth is a commodity, those who control it own the world.
